"Slowly, tenderly and let yourself melt" is an invitation to slow down, to rest, to allow yourself a moment of relaxation in a world saturated with agitation. Through a series of colourful drawings and textile sculptures incorporating anti-stress balls, I offer a sensory experience based on softness, suppleness and repetitive gesture as a method of emotional regulation. The soft materials, rounded shapes and soothing colours form a plastic language centred on care, the body and inner listening.

As part of the "Relax" exhibition at the Malévoz Quartier Culturel centre, I'm developing a site-specific installation incorporating an immersive sound composition, conceived as an extension of the mental space of rest. The ambience created becomes a cocoon, a temporary refuge where visitors can literally let themselves melt away. The project is part of a wider reflection on well-being practices and restorative gestures, and questions the place of slowness and empathy in contemporary art.

The series "My Dear Uncle" is inspired by the intimate connection I had with my uncle's living space, a place dear to my heart, now transformed and abandoned by time. Through works such as The Play Mat, The Bird in a Cage, and Tom & Jerry, I have reconstructed fragments of childhood memories. The play mat is reinvented from its memorable elements: the colors, the airplane pawns turned into slippers, and a deconstructed one, symbolizing family games. A birdcage, inspired by a specific memory, reflects the blurred line between life and death, with red and white birds and a white bird symbolizing hope. Finally, Tom & Jerry, a cartoon I watched at my uncle's house, becomes a tool for emotional reconstruction through illustrations and DVDs created from memories, where I identify with Jerry and my uncle with Tom. The entire installation becomes a sensitive exploration of memory, the transformation of places, and the persistence of emotional ties.

It Means Family is an installation born from my feelings of estrangement and weakening family ties. Drawing on my own experiences, I invited four people to share their family memories through photos, messages, and phone calls. Their translated and re-recorded voices create a collective soundscape. I used polystyrene, for its fragile texture evoking memory, and emotionally painted fabrics. The installation takes the form of three veiled spaces, inspired by my childhood mosquito net, symbolizing the warmth of home. The public is invited to enter these cocoons to discover intimate and universal stories.

Parasite, La vie en rose, Non, I am not a liar and Love are works resulting from different breakups I have experienced. Through them, I express the tensions, pains and contradictions of love. In Parasite, I use the image of body shrimp to represent the negative feelings that eat away at us from the inside, mixing kitchen elements, organic materials and whispered sounds to evoke emotional corrosion. Amour is a sensory and intimate exploration, where female voices, textures and images recreate a dreamlike universe, both childlike and adult. With La vie en rose, I address the incomprehension of love through gentleness, tears and simplicity. Finally, Non, I am not a liar addresses the wound of lies in a couple, through a wall piece composed of symbolic objects and personal comments. For me, love is both beauty and pain, a mystery that consumes as much as it gives life.

Faire le vide

Photographic series; 10 photographs ( each A2 format ); 2021.

My work lies at the intersection of image, sculpture, and installation, where I simultaneously explore collective and personal memory in search of those fleeting moments when life bursts beyond its routine. Daily life, with its often monotonous repetition, acts as a trigger: it pushes me to seek out intense emotions, intimate resonances that illuminate our days with flashes of lived experience. My ambition is to capture and make those sparks of feeling and memory vibrate—those that give life its depth, nuance, and singularity.

At the heart of my practice is a strong focus on emotional and tactile sensitivity. I aim to express not only the raw intensity of an emotion (sudden joy, lingering nostalgia, diffuse melancholy), but also its more imperceptible variations: tremors, hesitations, internal contradictions. I strive to translate these inner pulses through forms that can communicate feeling even before the viewer puts words to it.

The surface of a material—its texture, its softness or roughness—becomes a vehicle for emotion. Every fold, every layer, every touch invites a kind of mental caress.

Tactility is not there merely to trigger the desire to touch; it is a language of emotion in itself. A crumpled fabric, a soothing surface, a subtle relief—each acts as an intermediary between the artwork and the viewer's body, and thus with their inner world.

I naturally gravitate toward malleable, responsive materials: fabric, paper, clay, and foam respond directly to the hand. Working intuitively and spontaneously, I cultivate a physical closeness to the medium. My hands converse with the material, listening to its resistances, creases, collapses, and letting forms emerge that bear the imprint of that gesture.

I seek to create environments that invite the viewer to enter physically—by running a hand along a surface, sitting on a soft cushion, or slipping into a light textile cocoon. The work rarely unfolds in a fixed point; instead, it suggests a sensorial pathway, where each element responds to the previous one: a sketch on a wall, a sculpture half-hidden behind a drape, a faint sound accompanying movement.

Through this exploration of emotional, tactile, and spatial sensitivity, I aim to build a world where the plastic experience becomes a catalyst for intimate connections, where each person might recognize, within the material, echoes of their own sensations, emotions, and memories.
